oversized lions to guard Chinese exhibit

By DIXIE HARRIS

There are lions on the BYU campus. The marble lions travelled from the Forbidden City in Beijing, China, to their place in the Imperial Tombs exhibit at the BYU Museum of Art. The exhibit will be open to the public from Nov. 1 to March 16.

"It's the best show put together in or outside of China," said Richard Nelson, director of the Museum of Art.

"These things you would have seen over China, to nine different museums and three cultural centers," he said.

Beijing.

The lions acted as guardians to drive away evil. The two lions on exhibit are much larger than most because they protected the Forbidden City and the emperor, he said.

Each lion weighs 19,400 pounds, or nearly 20 tons, Mason said. The museum officials were concerned that the museum structure might not be strong enough to hold that much weight.

Three additional 900-pound I-beams were installed to spread out the weight of the marble lions, said Richard Nelson, BYU Planning Department Structural Engineer.

The lions stand on a four-foot by five-foot base, a small concentrated area of weight which would put stress on only one beam, so additional beams were installed, Nelson said.

Exhibit designer Paul Anderson, was concerned about what might be on the floor below the lions. He discovered upon checking, that his desk was directly underneath.

Pipe rollers will be used to roll the lions into the museum, in the same manner that ancient Egyptians used logs to move large pieces of stone, Anderson said.

A crane will then be used to lift and place the lions, said Kae Douglas, museum building supervisor.

Because the lions weigh so much, it would be a risk to the building to have the additional weight of the moving equipment, Douglas said.

Poverty in U.S. sees decline in 1994

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The percentage of Americans in poverty dropped 15 percent last year to 38.1 million, the first year in a decade that both the rate and total declined, according to a Census Bureau report. There were no signs that the gap between rich and poor was closing.

The report followed other recent signs of declining poverty including a decrease in Americans collecting food stamps.

However, the total was still 5.6 million above 1989, when the poverty rate was 13.1 percent, said Daniel Weinberg, chief of the Census Bureau's Housing and Household Economic Statistics Division, on Thursday.

Poverty in America was defined as being below an income of $15,141 for a family of four.

The poverty rate went from 15.1 percent of the population in 1993 to 14.5 percent in 1994, according to the Commerce Department report, which was based on a census survey of about 60,000 households.

The economy grew last year by 4.1 percent, the best showing in a decade. That strong growth helped to push the unemployment rate to a four-year low and played a role in lowering the poverty rate.

At the same time, median household income remained essentially unchanged at $32,264. The major exception was among black households, whose inflation-adjusted median rose from $20,032 in 1993 to

AT LAST?: Bosnian Serb soldier Aleksandar Milovic is laid to rest by his comrades Aug. 31 in Pale, Bosnia, about 16 miles east of Sarajevo. The 60-day cease-fire came too late for the 19-year-old, who was killed during NATO air-strikes on Bosnian Serb army radar communication facilities on Mt. Jahorina.

Muslims, Serbs agree 60-day cease-fire

Associated Press

SARAJEVO, Croatia — Bosnia's Muslims and Serbs agreed on Thursday to a 60-day cease-fire and new talks on their 3 1/2 years of carnage, the first big step closer to a peace agreement that U.S. troops would help enforce.

The Muslim-led government army will halt all offensive operations, including mine-laying and shelling, at midnight Tuesday (7:01 p.m. EDT Monday).

U.S. officials say that deadline must be extended if utilities are not restored to Sarajevo by then, a demand of the Bosnian government.

During a fourth winter of war with the city surrounded by its capital, officials insisted on secure lines of gas and electricity. Utility lines through Serb territory and been repeatedly cut to put pressure on Sarajevo.

The cease-fire accord was reached after the United States' strongest demand for peace in Bosnia. When the agreement was reached in Dayton, President Clinton acknowledged that problems remained to be solved before it takes effect Tuesday.

"We need to be clear-eyed about this," he said. "It matters what the parties do, not just what they say."

NATO planners said they would hasten work on a military force to help enforce an eventual peace arrangement. The United States would commit roughly 20,000 troops to such a force, but says it would not enter Bosnia until a final peace deal is signed.

Citing progress toward peace, the United Nations announced it could cut its troops in Bosnia by 9,000, or one-third of its force there. It was not known how long the withdrawals would take.

"Today marks another important step forward, undeniably a big step forward," Assistant Secretary of State Richard Holbrooke told reporters in Zagreb, the Croatian capital, after travelling through the Balkans. "We're pleased with where we are."

In the northern Serb stronghold of Banja Luka, Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic said he saw no reason to take back by force territory Serbs recently have lost. "We want peace, and we have to be practical," he said.

Under the agreement, signed by Bosnian President Alija Izetbegovic

Sperry symposium adopts Book of Mormon theme

By MARISSA THOMPSON
Religion Editor

The 24th annual Sidney B. Sperry Symposium will be Saturday in the JSB auditorium from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Five speakers will address various topics on this year's theme, The Book of Mormon.

Because it would be Sperry's 100th birthday if he were still alive, the symposium organization committee has changed the event's format this year, said Paul H. Peterson, chairman of the committee.

"Normally, we have various scholars submit a paper if they want to, and we feature 20 to 40 speakers — usually three or four an hour — so people have their choice," Peterson said. "This year we thought we'd do something special, so we've asked prominent Book of Mormon scholars to come (and speak). Most of them are old friends of Sidney Sperry."

Elder Jeffrey R. Holland of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles will give the keynote address, "Christ in the Book of Mormon," at 9 a.m.

"I'm confident that Elder Holland will give a memorable address on remembering Christ," Peterson said.

The Sidney B. Sperry Symposium began in 1971 and is named for Professor Sperry, who taught at BYU for nearly 40 years, said Ellis T. Rasmussen, former dean of Religious Education and long-time associate of Sperry. During that time, Sperry taught math, chemistry and various religion classes, Rasmussen said.

Rasmussen said Sperry was what students today would call a "laid-back" teacher.

Describing Sperry's routine as a teacher, Rasmussen said, "He came in, sat down, and usually made some amusing observation." "He was confident and well-informed," he said. "He would deal with questions and get back on track. He was strongly convinced of the truthfulness of the gospel, and he was interested in helping young people gain what he thought they could gain."

Sperry, who retired from BYU in 1971, was greatly responsible for a full-time religion faculty at BYU, Rasmussen said.

"He felt that it would be well to have a core who had specialized in history and church history," he said.

Beyond teaching, Sperry was also the author of various books. Some of his book titles include "The Spirit of the Old Testament" and "Our Book of Mormon."

"He had virtually written about each of the LDS scriptures before he was finished," Rasmussen said.

Opal kills 11, leaves thousands devastated and homeless

Associated Press

PANAMA CITY BEACH, Fla. — Under blue skies, the damage wrought by Hurricane Opal became clear Thursday: hundreds of houses smashed into splintered boards, condominiums flattened, hotel walls caved in and boats tossed ashore along 120 miles of eroded beach.

"This is what I call utter destruction," an astonished Al Donaldson said as the homeowner looked over Santa Rosa Beach, west of Panama

City. Opal, which hit land late Wednesday with gusts up to 144 mph, killed at least 11 people and caused an estimated $1.8 billion in damage to insured property along the Florida Panhandle. That made it the second-costliest storm in state history after Hurricane Andrew, which inflicted $17 billion in damage in 1992.

Fifteen Panhandle counties were approved for federal emergency aid.

"Blocks and blocks of homes are gone," said Jo Miglino, a spokeswoman for the state Division of Emergency Management. "We have widespread reports ... of many, many homes destroyed."

Opal lost its punch as it blew through Alabama but still knocked out power to 2 million in Florida, Georgia, Alabama and the Carolinas. Many homes also had no water or phone service.

Nearly 3,000 police and National Guardsmen were posted in Florida to prevent looting. Bay County, where an estimated 100 homes were destroyed and 1,000 damaged, was Accidental in-car shooting sends auto off road

SPANISH FORK — A woman ran her car off the road in Spanish Fork Canyon after being accidentally shot in the foot by her husband, the Utah County sheriff's office reports.

Sheriff's spokesman Ron Fernstedt said the 30-year-old Kearns woman, who was not otherwise identified, was driving the couple's vehicle on their way to a vacation in Kentucky at about 7:30 p.m. Wednesday when her husband's 9mm handgun went off.

She was treated at the scene by a passing nurse and taken by ambulance to the Mountain View Hospital in Payson.

Fernstedt said the woman's husband was arrested at the scene for investigation of possible firearms violations, including possession of a loaded firearm in a moving vehicle with an open container of alcohol in the car.

No other cars or injuries were involved in the incident, Fernstedt said.

Board approves early end to fuel regulation

Utah County residents will get a six-week reprieve from the oxygenated fuel requirement this winter.

The state Air Quality Board voted 6-0 Wednesday to approve a request to end the oxygenated fuel period on Jan. 15, 1996. The oxygenated fuel requirement starts Nov. 1.

The request was made by the Utah Division of Air Quality and Desert Research Institute, based in Reno, Nev. The groups are conducting studies to determine the fuel's effect on air pollution levels. Officials wanted an early end to the oxygenated fuel season to observe winter air conditions without the fuel's influence.

Oxygenated fuel, gasoline blended with grain alcohol or other oxygen-boosting substances, is used in Utah County to reduce carbon monoxide levels. The fuel burns more thoroughly than conventional gasoline and produces less carbon monoxide.

N.J. parishioners skip Pope's visit to gamble

NEWARK, N.J. — Not even the spiritual leader of the world's Roman Catholics can come between gamblers and their slots.

While the Archdiocese of Newark made last-minute preparations for Pope John Paul II's visit on Wednesday, 80 parishioners from Sacred Heart Cathedral boarded buses for Atlantic City.

"It's ironic," acknowledged Sebastian DeFroschia, 80, president of the Sacred Heart September Club, which sponsored the trip. The seniors paid $70 a head for the overnight trip to the Grand and the Sands Casino Hotel.

The trip was planned 10 months ago, before the Pope's visit, DeFroschia said.

Members of the local flock were sheepish as they boarded buses parked near where the pontiff held an evening prayer service hours later.

"I saw him last time he was here (in New Jersey)," said Helen Cardell, 72. "I'll see him on TV."

Historic statue to stand near Bugs Bunny

BOSTON — Yyyyyyaaaaaaah, what's up, Doc? Certainly not a bust of abolitionist Frederick Douglass. Red tape is keeping the statue from being installed in historic Faneuil Hall.

But a larger statue, Bugs Bunny in bronze, has popped up outdoors at the opposite end of Faneuil Hall Marketplace, about 100 yards from where Douglass' bust will be erected.

Bugs Bunny is on private property in front of the Warner Brothers Studio Store. The Douglass statue is headed for a spot inside the 253-year-old meeting hall owned by the city.

City officials have wanted to honor a historical black figure in the meeting house, but a suitable bust was not found until September 1994.

The Douglass memorial has been approved by the city arts commission, but the bust lies on its side on a vinyl couch in a storage closet. It will remain there until the artist, Lloyd Lillie, builds a pedestal that meets the specifications of the city landmarks commission.

The stand must exactly match those supporting the marble figures already there, including John Adams and John Quincy Adams.

Elves program gets coal

By ERIC DON HAWKINS
Universe Staff Writer

The Davis County Department of Human Services will not operate its Sponsors For Santa Program this year because of staff and budget cuts.

Trish Mecham, who has headed the program for the last four years, said that it takes two or three full-time staff members more than two months to make the program happen. Budget cuts handed down from the federal government have made it impossible for the department to staff or fund the effort.

The program was initiated several years ago by the cities of Davis County, and has been a great success in the past. Families who are in need of help to celebrate Christmas send applications to the department, who pairs them with a sponsor. The sponsor then provides a Christmas dinner for the family, and at least one new toy for each child in the family. Repeat applicants for assistance receive the food box and a gift certificate the second year, and a food box only the third and fourth year.

All previous recipients were notified in a letter dated Sept. 5 that there would be no program this year, and were instructed to work with church organizations, families, and friends to provide for their holiday needs.

"We've had a few calls from distraught people," Mecham said, "but most have been understanding."

At least one of the sponsors from years past is not so understanding, however. Robyn Stringham is angered and confused about why there will be no program.

"How much money do you need to run this program?" Stringham said. "Staffing cuts I can understand, but how much does it cost? ... Everything is donated."

Another concern is the late notice received by the families that need assistance.

"I think it is a little late to be telling these people that they won't have a Christmas because of budget cuts," Stringham said. "If budget cuts are the problem, they (Davis County) probably knew in January."

Liz Rose, a case worker for the Salvation Army, is in charge of the Holiday Cooperative Program, the group that is trying to pick up the slack left by the cancellation of Sponsors for Santa. She is working with Mecham to find a group that can handle such a large undertaking.

In the meantime, families who need assistance or would like to be sponsors can register with the Holiday Cooperative.

under a dusk-to-dawn curfew, and the Guard set up a center to provide food, water, clothes and showers to people left homeless.

As Opal approached land Wednesday, more than 100,000 coastal residents fled inland, clogging highways. After the hurricane had passed, hundreds of people were frustrated when police refused to let them return to their homes.

"They're telling us some of the houses were blown right into the water," said Mike Moody, who was trying to get back to his home on Navarre Beach.

"We can't let people back — not even if they are trying to get back to their homes," said Okaloosa County Sheriff's Deputy Rick Hord. "They would have no power and no sewage service. You can't even flush the toilets because there's no water. If there is water, it is likely to be full of disease."

By midday, Opal had been downgraded to a tropical depression and was 95 miles south of Lexington, Ky., with sustained winds of 35 mph.

In a year of record hurricane activity, Opal stood out as one of the worst to hit the Gulf Coast since Hurricane Camille killed 256 people in 1969.

Officials didn't immediately know the number of buildings destroyed or people left homeless.

Hardest hit were beachfront houses, condominiums and businesses along the swath of barrier islands famous for their sugar-white beaches. The waves carved 8-foot cliffs out of sand dunes and left swimming pools filled with dark-green seawater.

"Have you seen the beach? It's gone," Jan Oswald, who lives near Seaside, said after walking 10 miles along the beach. "I'm devastated by it. I haven't had a good cry yet."

Seen from the air, almost every other home along a coastal highway near Mexico Beach was smashed. Elsewhere, rows of wood-frame condos had been crushed or pulled off their foundations. In some places, only the concrete high-rises escaped destruction.

Wayne Anderson, manager of Harry T's Boathouse at the Destin Yacht Club, watched as Opal swept away the restaurant's boardwalk and blew out the windows of its terrace room. "I called it the poltergeist room," he said. "It was just a whirlwind of stuff flying around."

Three other nearby restaurants were washed out to sea.

In Panama City Beach, beachfront homes blew apart, hotel walls crumbled and the streets were littered with boards, chunks of roofing, sections of wooden walkways and broken furniture.

Water surged into the first floors of some buildings and swept furniture into the Gulf and onto roads.

The waves made lawn ornaments out of boats, tossing dozens of them onto land and sinking dozens more in marinas. A pontoon boat blasted through two small buildings and landed on Harry T's parking lot, Anderson said.

Many residents still hadn't finished rebuilding after Hurricane Erin hit two months ago, causing $350 million damage to insured property.

A 76-year-old woman was killed in her home in Crestview, in the Panhandle, by a tornado spawned by Opal. In Georgia, seven people were killed in Opal-related accidents. In Alabama, a tree fell on a trailer, killing two people. And in western North Carolina, a man was killed when a tree fell on a mobile home.

In Santa Rosa Beach, Opal obliterated a five-bedroom house belonging to a Tulsa, Okla., couple who had planned to use it as a retirement home. Its roof was found in a lake nearly a half-mile away.

"This was our house!" Tom Stanton said in disbelief. "It's gone!"

$21,027 last year, an increase of 5 percent.

The very rich continued to grow richer while the very poor got poorer, or, as Weinberg put it: "The long-term trend in the U.S. has been toward increasing income inequality."

Isaac Shapiro, associate director of the Liberal Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, attributed last year's decline in poverty to the economic recovery that began in 1992.

Other findings of the report included:

- Married-couple family households experienced a 1.8 percent increase in real median income between 1993 and 1994. Family households headed by women with no husband present experienced a 4.5 percent increase.
- Children make up 40 percent of the poor although they'd dropped 10 percent of the population. The poverty rate was higher than other age group — 21.8 percent — this was a significant increase from 1993 when it was 22.2 percent, Weinberg said.

- The South, long the region with the highest poverty rate, saw a decline in its poverty rate from 16.1 percent in 1993 to 16.0 percent in 1994. The West's rate, which was not significantly different last year.

- While the number of Americans dropped slightly between 1993 and 1994 — from 250 million to 248 million — the number of poor Hispanics increased from 10.2 million to 10.4 million.

Internet speeds research, communication

By BRAD LEONE
Universe Staff Writer

The Internet is quickly becoming one of the best research tools available, and people who know how to use it have access to vast amounts of information.

College students can benefit by using the Internet because it makes old methods of research obsolete, said Parker Garlitz, vice president of Internet Technology Services in Provo.

"There's no point going to the library anymore, no reason to read an encyclopedia any more," Garlitz said.

Students can access the same information through the Internet, which is often more current than library resource books, Garlitz said.

"Any student who is not on the Internet needs to get on it," Garlitz said.

Others agree that the Internet can be a valuable research tool.

"You can look up any topic and find other articles that have been written on the same subject," said Gerry Santy, a technical support representative from a large computer manufacturer.

The amount of available information has grown since the U.S. government established the Internet in the late 1960s during the heart of the Cold War.

The defense department wanted a computer system that could be unified throughout the United States with the capability to launch a retaliatory nuclear strike, Garlitz said.

The computer system grew as more government locations obtained the equipment to attach themselves to the original "net" of computers.

Universities soon gained access to the net, trading information and sharing research findings.

In the late 1980s, more and more people began to go online. Computer owners, using their modems, accessed nationwide bulletin boards through companies like America Online and CompuServe.

The bulletin boards were centralized pages that let computer users share commentary and download games and other programs, available for little or no charge.

The e-mail movement grew from the bulletin boards. Computer users began to send messages directly to each other instead of on the centralized bulletin boards.

The Internet provides users with text-only services like e-mail, bulletin boards and news groups, which allow people to share thoughts and ideas.

The World Wide Web is part of the Internet, but the Web uses graphics and commercial ties to lure Internet users to "surf" home pages, which provide access to universities, businesses and tourist locations.

"There's a vast amount of information available on the Internet," said Angi Hansen, 22, a graduate student from Farmington in the MBA program. She uses the Internet to do research.

The Internet is easy to use, educational and an important skill for anyone planning to work in the business world, Hansen said.

"Some people in companies aren't going to know how to use the Internet, so they will want others to show them how," Hansen said.

In the past two years, the World Wide Web became a well-defined, separate part of the Internet.

The World Wide Web is used for educational and commercial purposes, giving participants access to text and pictures of places, products, companies, universities and recreational activities. Users can find information quickly.

"For a class, I had to research a company in South America," Hansen said. "It took me five minutes on the Internet."

The Internet will last, Santy said. "Twenty years from now students will have unlimited access to information — and we're almost there now," he said.

nts made in the courtroom and ne if any attorney engaged in that violated the Bar's Rules of Professional Conduct," she said.

The investigation was prompted by complaints from the public and "the judiciary," the Bar said in a statement.

It wasn't disclosed whether "the judiciary" pertained to Superior Court Judge Lance Ito, but Ito repeatedly made his displeasure clear over the lawyers' conduct inside and outside his court. At times, he ruled that contemptuous or near-contemptuous statements were made by defense attorneys Johnnie Cochran Jr. and Peter Neufeld and by prosecutors Christopher Darden and Marcia Clark.

The sniping that so annoyed Ito didn't cease with the verdict. Defense attorney Robert Shapiro denied he ever tried to plea bargain Simpson's murder case, saying Simpson vowed his innocence from Day 1 and never changed that position.

"There was never, ever discussion of anything other than going to trial and having this tried by a jury," Shapiro said in an interview with The

Associated Press.

The report of a plea bargain was raised Wednesday by attorney F. Lee Bailey. He accused Shapiro of crafting a deal that involved Robert Kardashian, Simpson's friend and lawyer who was seen carrying Simpson's garment bag away from Simpson's estate when he returned from Chicago the day after the murders.

In New York, the New Yorker magazine announced that Fuhrman had dropped his libel suit against the publication and writer Jeffrey Toobin over a July 1994 article that spelled out the defense plan to accuse Fuhrman of planting the bloody glove.

At the Criminal Courts Building, the post mortem continued in the district attorney's office, as prosecutor Brian Kelberg said he felt the prosecution started with a handicap because of Simpson's celebrity status.

"That was the most difficult thing to overcome," Kelberg said. "No matter how strong a case you have, you have a public icon who you say did two horrible murders. It's just out of focus with what people think of O.J. Simpson."

The caliber of jurors available, Kelberg said, may give a celebrity defendant an advantage.

"I think where the system is most vulnerable is the pool of people willing and able to serve as jurors. ... How are we going to get a surgeon or a bank president? We need a broader spectrum of jurors."

Right now, he said, juries are top heavy with government employees and retirees, the only ones who can afford to serve. And, he suggested, people most affected by mass media are included in many juries.

"In this society, with television, cable and movies and with the difficulties life presents to so many people, maybe the only joy people can get is watching celebrities," Kelberg said.

Y offers Spanish-diploma exam

By JAKE LOWRY
Universe Staff Writer

The Spanish Ministry of Education has selected BYU to offer the prestigious Diplomas de Espanol como Lengua Extranjera, or DELE, exam. BYU is one of two sites in the western United States to host the exam.

Created by the University Salamanca of Spain and administered through the Instituto Cervantes, the DELE exam offers worldwide accreditation for citizens of countries where Spanish is not the official language.

The exam tests a person's ability to read, write and understand Spanish. Those who pass receive diplomas that allow them to be recognized globally for proficiency in the Spanish language and culture.

In 1994, more than 10,000 people in 36 countries took the DELE examination. More than 2,000 people have already obtained the DELE diploma in the United States and Canada. The diplomas are recognized not only by official institutions of Spanish speaking countries, but also by corporations, chambers of commerce and educational institutions.

BYU faculty said they are honored to be chosen to administer the exam.

"We are honored to host the DELE exam," said John

Rosenberg, chair of the Spanish and Portuguese Department. "It builds credibility for our university as well as gives many citizens the opportunity to prove their abilities concerning the Spanish language and culture."

Quina Hoskisson, associate chair of the Spanish and Portuguese Department, said the DELE diploma has many benefits for those who know Spanish and could use a prestigious certification to show it.

"The DELE diploma provides an individual with an internationally recognized credential in the Spanish language," Hoskisson said. "It is extremely beneficial for anyone interested in the National Guard, teaching, medicine, business and many other careers."

The exam includes five tests: reading comprehension, written expression, listening comprehension, grammar and vocabulary, and oral expression.

Two diplomas are available: the Diploma Basico for high intermediate level and the Diploma Superior for advanced Spanish speakers.

The exam will be given Nov. 18. The deadline for registration is Oct. 18, and the exam costs $50 for the Diploma Basico and $60 for the Diploma Superior.

Anyone interested in the DELE exam can pick up an application in 4050 JKH or call 378-2837 for more information.

PRESIDENT REX E. LEE

Pres. Lee emphasizes undergraduate studies at Y

By RHONDA SLUDER
Universe Staff Writer

President Rex E. Lee revealed his vision of BYU's future at the Honors Forum on Thursday.

Though BYU has changed greatly during the 40 years since Pres. Lee attended, some aspects remain the same, he said.

"Our principal emphasis is to teach students on the undergraduate level and prepare them ... to go on to graduate school," he said. With this principle in mind, he said BYU will always be predominantly an undergraduate education institution, for two reasons:

First, guidance and counsel can be most effectively given to students at the undergraduate level.

"I really don't know of any other university of our size and certainly our quality that gives the emphasis to teaching as we do," Pres. Lee said.

U.S. News and World Report ranked BYU in the top 25 of one of its newest categories: "best teaching universities."

The quality of the BYU faculty will continue to increase, Pres. Lee said.

The second reason is the lower expense of an undergraduate education, compared to a graduate education.

Pres. Lee said tuition costs are low because nearly 70 percent of the education of a BYU undergraduate student is paid for by the LDS Church.

"There is no school that has near the level of church financial support that we do," he said.

Pres. Lee also said the LDS Church will always influence BYU. Each student will continue to receive a "unique training" due to the mixture of faith in academic studies, he said.

Additionally, Pres. Lee said a new study by the university shows that BYU inspires students to pay tithing, attend the temple, and do missionary work.

Though the quality of faculty and students will continue to increase, the size of the student body will not, Pres. Lee said. BYU will become even more selective in the future for the simple fact that while BYU has a size cap, the church does not, he said.

According to Pres. Lee, the solution for this problem is not to create more universities like BYU, but instead to create more two-year schools like Ricks College, possibly in the Midwest.

Pres. Lee said the church is concerned about the selectiveness of BYU, but for now the immediate answer is to just increase the quality of the institute programs throughout the nation.

Though Pres. Lee does not predict a larger student body, he does foresee the physical growth of the BYU campus, primarily for the enhancement of education.

Ocean Blue perfect band for Y crowd

By JASON T. GOUGH
Universe Staff Writer

It was like familiar friends coming back to visit, even though Wednesday evening was The Ocean Blue's first show at BYU.

As predicted, they were the perfect band to re-open BYU's big-name band hope chest.

Pennyroyal Crush started things off with a 20-minute set that was well-received by the audience. Ali Ali Oxen Free's sound has become more aggressive, as the band has undergone some member changes. They warmed up the crowd after their 45-minute set, setting a perfect stage for The Ocean Blue's performance.

"I thought it was fantastic," said Amelene Desrosiers, 25, a senior from Medford, Ore.

Desrosiers saw The Ocean Blue in 1989, the same year the band released their first, self-titled, album. The band seemed to work more with the audience this time, she said.

Most of the more familiar songs from The Ocean Blue's repertoire were played, with the occasional new song from their forthcoming album, scheduled for release sometime in early 1996.

"You're a fine university for having us," said David Schelzel, lead vocalist.

Although the band played two shows in Provo, Schelzel said he wasn't aware of any big differences in the two.

"It has more to do with the people you play for," Schelzel said.

Schelzel said he thought playing in Provo was great and liked the crowd's enthusiasm. Toward the end of the show, security had a hard time keeping the oscillating audience back.

When the band played the song "Marigolds," someone threw marigolds on the stage. Band members played the rest of the set with the flowers on their guitars.

The Ocean Blue played an hour-long set with a three-song encore, including the favorite "Between Something and Nothing."

Schelzel, who referred to Utah as a magical place, said their main reason for coming was the efforts made by promoter Terry Xanthos.

Any place that has great people is a good place to play Schelzel said.

"Utah happens to be full of great people," Schelzel said.

Along with Utah, Schelzel said some of his favorite places to play are Seattle, Atlanta and Los Angeles.

Ann Baier, administrative assistant at BYUSA, said the administration seemed pleased with the performance.

"The crowd was really good," Baier said. "Everyone looked like they were having a good time."

After doing some shows in the south, The Ocean Blue will head home to Pennsylvania to finish up their new album. The band will do a more extensive tour after the album's release. They hope to be back in Utah next spring.

To quote Dave's lyrics, the evening was "so sublime."

Shakespeare's 'Comedy of Errors' opens at BYU

By SAMANTHA RIGO
Universe Staff Writer

Mistaken identities, lack of communication and a court trial are just a few elements broached in "Comedy of Errors," a Shakespeare play that will be performed at the Pardoe Theatre this week.

"The play has a family focus," said Marion Bentley, BYU professor of theater and director of the play. "It will be very light and entertaining."

The comedy, a farce of a Roman play by Plautus, is set in the city of Ephesus, an important business and religious center in Asia Minor after the death of Christ. The set will look like a Turkish bazaar and the actors will wear brightly-colored Turkish costumes.

The plot concerns a family with identical twins and identical twin servants. During a trip at sea the family is separated, setting the stage for a long search. The mother searches for her twin son and husband, the father searches for his other twin son and wife, and a servant searches for his twin brother who is also a servant. The complication and humor increases when the twins, both sets, are in the same city.

"What I like the best is that the script allows for a lot of confusion, frustration and fun things to happen," said Ryan Peterson, a sophomore majoring in theater from Fort Scott, Kan. Peterson will be playing Dromio of Syracuse, a twin servant.

"One of the things that I really enjoy about the play is that my twin is really my twin," Peterson said.

"It's a really enjoyable play," said Emmelyn Thayer, a BYU junior and theater major from Provo who will be playing the abbess. "It's about communication and the lack of it and what it can lead to."

"Comedy of Errors" plays from Oct. 4 through Oct. 21, Tuesdays through Saturdays, at the Pardoe Theatre. Tickets can be purchased at the Fine Arts Ticket Office at $6 for students, faculty and staff, $7 for senior citizens and $8 for the general public. For further information call 378-4322.

Utah brass ensemble to perform Sunday

By TIFFANY TERRY
Universe Staff Writer

Brassworks Centennial Band will seek to entertain as well as educate its audience in their performance at the Provo Tabernacle this Sunday.

Brassworks Centennial Band was selected to be part of the Provo City Arts Council's free concert series because their music appeals to everyone, "both the young at heart and the young in age," said Kathryn Allen, director of the Provo City Arts Council.

Brassworks Centennial Band, an extension of the BYU faculty brass quintet Brassworks, includes faculty members from universities and colleges around the state and was created to commemorate Utah's centennial in 1996.

"The band's mission is to entertain and educate people about the rich cultural heritage of Utah," said Steve Call, BYU faculty member and founder of Brassworks Centennial Band.

Music has been a part of Utah's history from the beginning. Brigham Young recognized that music was essential to morale and at his insistence a brass band was part of the first company of pioneers who made the trek to Utah. A band met each subsequent group of pioneers as they made their way down Immigration Canyon, Call said.

Brigham Young also made sure that a musician was part of each group sent to establish communities around the state. The musicians provided the keys to cultural development by directing choirs, forming bands and providing music for dances, Call said.

The early settlers' emphasis on music and culture is reflected in the amount of quality cultural activities in the state, like the Utah Symphony, the Utah Opera Company, Ballet West and the Pioneer Theatre Company which are found in Salt Lake City today, Call said.

The Brassworks Centennial Band's repertoire represents the big brass band era of the late 19th century. Music on the program is composed of band music from the Civil War, popular songs of the period, as well as special arrangements commissioned for Utah's state centennial, said Dan Bachelder, BYU faculty member and member of the band.

Included in the program will be a solo performance by Catherine Little of "After the Ball," the first national mega-hit that launched band music and the popular music industry as we know it today, Call said. Other soloists include Ron Brough on the xylophone, Brett Jackson on the Coronet and Steve Call on the tuba.

The concert will be at the Provo Tabernacle at 100 S. University Ave. As part of the Community Music Series, the concert is free and open to the public. Provo Tabernacle Doors open at 6:30 p.m. and the concert begins at 7 p.m.

Vocalists to perform in Ore

By ERIC D. DIXON
Lifestyle Editor

Extempo and Vocal Point, two local a cappella singing groups, will be performing Saturday at 7:30 p.m. at Orem High School.

Vocal Point is a nine-voice, all-male BYU a cappella group that was started by two former students, Bob Ahlander and Dave Boyce, just for fun. Since then, it's been made an official vocal ensemble in BYU's music department. Ahlander and Boyce continued their a cappella activity by forming the professional group Extempo when they graduated.

"They perform quite a variety of musical styles," said Lisa Boyce, Extempo's business manager. She said their influences range through jazz, pop, rhythm and blues, rock and barbershop quartet music.

Extempo has recently concentrated on presenting their sound to a wide variety of audiences, by touring campuses around the nation.

"They just returned from the East coast, where they performed in Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, New York, Maryland and the Washington, D.C., area," Boyce said. "These tours are mostly colleges and universities and the to full houses and standing ovations. It's been overwhelming response they've had on the road."

Extempo will be touring Southern states later this month performing in Georgia, North Carolina, North Carolina, Virginia and Tennessee.

"On dates that they're not on a tour, they try to do a fire perform for an institute group college near the area," Boyce said. "We're just excited that they're doing it."

One of the reasons for the local following and widespread popularity is their unique, humorous approach to the music.

"Humor is a large part of Vocal Point tradition, and that's intely continued with Extempo," Boyce said.

Vocal Point has released a new album called "Instruments Not Included" and is working on a new one. Extempo will release its first "Channel 32," in November.

Tickets cost $6 and can be purchased at Mama's Cafe, Hogi in Provo, Kent's Market, or by calling 371-8941. Tickets will be sold at the door one hour prior to the performance, if they aren't out.

BYU comedy group to perform at Fall Fling

By SAMANTHA RIGO
 Universe Staff Writer

A gregarious bunch of BYU students meet twice a week to prepare for their monthly performances of original sketch comedy.

"Divine Comedy," a BYUSA group consisting of 10 students, will be performing this Friday for the Fall Fling. A special behind-the-scenes look revealed the painstaking process of creating a sketch comedy show.

Suggestions and feedback are part of the continual process of putting a sketch together. Tonight's sketches are a result of hours of contemplation, debate and practice, which results in comedic brilliance.

One sketch, titled "Word Power," features the word "dude" as a word that can convey thousands of meanings.

Another sketch is a Star Trek parody in which roommates are obsessed by the show and act out their lives like a Star Trek episode. The comedians impersonate Spock, Bones, Scotty and Captain Kirk with amazing accuracy and ham it up with Star Trek jargon.

A sketch that is sure to be a crowd pleaser is one in which celebrity impersonators sing primary songs in the style of their characters. Marilyn Monroe will sing "Happy, Happy, Birthday."

Louis Armstrong will be impersonated, as well as other celebrities. It is rumored that Elvis will be performing in the building as well.

"Missionary Detraining Center" is also an excellent sketch which pokes fun at the all-too-real social inadequacies of returned missionaries.

The group has written approximately 75 sketches in the past two years.

"We set out to make people laugh," said Randy Davis, a senior from Escondido, Calif., majoring in English and two-year veteran of the group. "For me, it's a huge stress reliever to be able to perform and to get together with the members of the group," said Mike Rasmussen, a senior majoring in computer science from Philadelphia, Pa. "We're like a family."

Indeed, at the rehearsal a general aura of camaraderie was present. As each of the student comedians straggled in to the rehearsals, the group would belt out a collective greeting and continue practicing.

"I love to perform on a continual basis," said Nancy Worth, an open-major sophomore from Corvallis, Ore.

Utah St. looking to unseat top-ranked SoccerCats

By CHARLES BREINHOLT
Universe Sports Writer

The talent of the Utah State Aggies' soccer team will be a challenge, but BYU's soccer coach said the SoccerCats will come out on top in their Friday night game.

"This is definitely a game we should win, but Utah State plays with so much emotion that it is always a close match. They are a good team," BYU coach Chris Watkins said.

Utah State assistant coach Jim Maples said he likes his team's chances against BYU.

"Our talent has risen to a national-caliber level," he said. "Our program is continuing to improve. We feel like we don't have to have breaks to beat any team."

Two or three years ago we couldn't beat BYU or play at their level. We had to have a break to beat them," Maples said. "This year in the Labor Day tournament they had to get the breaks to beat us."

BYU beat Utah State in that match 2-1 en route to the Labor Day tournament title.

"That was the closest match we've played — besides those against Division I teams," Watkins said.

According to Maples, Utah State took five or six shots on goal, but the ball hit the post, leaving Utah State with only one point. BYU got all the breaks.

The SoccerCats enter Friday's game with an overall record of 14-0-1 and a No. 1 national ranking in the National Collegiate Soccer Association poll.

Utah State has played fewer games. Ranked No. 13 in the national poll, the Aggies have a record of 5-4-1.

Maples said the most talented Utah State players are forward Curtis Bingham, mid fielder Joshua Steele and sweeper Chad Mellison.

"Steele could play on almost any team in the nation," Maples said.

Steele had a four-year scholarship to play soccer in Florida, but after his mission he decided to attend Utah State.

Watkins noted of Mellison, "He is a really good sweeper. He is probably the most talented player on the Utah State team. He won't give up much."

The key to a BYU victory in this meeting is capitalizing on any scoring opportunities and playing tough defense, Watkins said.

PLAYING KEEP AWAY: A BYU player gains control of the ball with a Northern Colorado defender in hot pursuit in their game Sept. 8. BYU plays Utah State tonight at the South Field at 7:30 p.m. In their last game against USU, the SoccerCats squeaked out a 2-1 win.

"The main thing is finishing on our opportunities. We haven't been able to put the ball in the net. That's what we have been working on in practice this week."

"If our defense plays like they were playing a week or two ago, we shouldn't have many problems. Fortunately our defenders are very talented," Watkins said.

The SoccerCats and the Aggies clash Friday at 7:30 p.m. The game will be played at South Field.

Water polo begins season in search of national respect

By JOHN RASMUSSEN
Universe Sports Writer

With a goal of being ranked among the top-10 club teams in America, BYU's water polo team begins its season tonight with a game against the Utah Masters.

The Utah Masters is made up of players who have played water polo in high school or college and are now living in the Salt Lake and Provo areas.

For BYU to be ranked among the nation's top club teams, it must become a member of the Collegiate Club League by playing other league teams. Water polo coach Dave Dooley feels BYU has the talent to beat the teams from the league and be ranked in the top 10.

Although a BYU victory over the Masters, a non-league team, won't propel the Cougars into the rankings, it will provide them experience for future tournaments against league members.

Dooley said the Utah Masters is a very competitive team with experienced players. The players are bigger and more physical than BYU's, he added.

Because the Masters don't play together as much, BYU definitely has a chance to beat them, Dooley said. He said that as long as BYU controls the tempo by playing solid, smart water polo and avoiding a physical match by using its speed advantage, the Cougars can win.

One of the team's strengths this year is its depth. Dooley feels that of the 15 players on the team, any one of them can make an impact in the pool.

The Cougar goalies for this season are another integral part of the talented team. Dooley said they are excellent and should provide more counter-attack success during the season.

BYU hopes the excitement of this game matches that of the last game played between the Masters and the Cougars. During the last installment of the friendly rivalry, BYU concluded a five-goal comeback by scoring the winning goal as time expired.

The game is slated for 7 p.m. at the Richards Building pool. Admission is free.

Toughest WAC road trip awaits volleyball team

By CHRIS JONES
Universe Sports Writer

The 19th-ranked BYU women's volleyball team faces its biggest WAC challenge yet as it hits the road to play Fresno State and San Diego State this weekend.

Today's match against Fresno State is meaningful for the Cougars because the only conference loss they suffered last year came at the hands of Fresno State on the road, coach Elaine Michaelis said.

"On a difficult road trip, it's sometimes hard for young people to maintain focus and confidence," Michaelis said. "Fresno State is a difficult place to play. They have a great crowd and a very good team."

While Fresno State has stumbled in conference play, putting up a 1-2 record, it has a strong 13-3 record overall.

The second stop on the trip will be the much anticipated matchup with San Diego State, which ranks 21st in the AVCA poll. The Aztecs rank one spot ahead of BYU in the Volleyball Magazine poll at 17th.

Although BYU is undefeated in WAC play against SDSU, this year could be different as the Aztecs are pre-season favorites to win the WAC championship.

San Diego State has experience, with most of its starters returning from last year, but Michaelis is focusing more on the play of her own team.

"San Diego State will be extremely tough. They have great talent and experience," Michaelis said. "With how well the other teams are playing, we just have to take care of ourselves and do what we do best."

The Cougars take with them a 10-3 record (2-1 in the WAC) with two resounding victories over Colorado State and Wyoming last weekend.

Golfers seek confidence boost in Oregon

By JOHN RASMUSSEN
Universe Sports Writer

Looking to rebound from a disappointing ninth-place finish at its opening tournament, BYU's men's golf team heads to the Northwest to try and return to its winning ways.

The Cougars will play in the Nike Northwest Classic in Corvallis, Ore., this weekend.

Coming off a WAC championship in the 1994-1995 season, and returning with almost all the players from that team, the ninth-place finish left coach Bruce Brockbank disappointed.

Todd Pence, a senior majoring in civil engineering from Cheney, Wash., feels that the team will rebound. He said a team can't be expected to win every week.

Sometimes you just aren't going to play well, Pence said. He is hoping to get a little spark, however, from the team's poor outing at the William H. Tucker Invitational.

Another member of the golf team, Lonnie Damon, a senior majoring in recreation management from Bend, Ore., feels the team pushed too hard at the first tournament.

Damon, who had the lowest score for the Cougars at the Tucker Invitational, expects that the course in Oregon could help the Cougars finish higher than ninth. He said playing smart and avoiding the big mistake on the straightforward course will result in low scores.

The team looks to build confidence during the upcoming weekend.

A win would bolster team spirits, Damon said. The golfers would then know that they don't have to settle for second or third place. They will go for first every time, Damon continued.

SPERRY SYMPOSIUM

TRIBUTE TO A SCHOLAR

The 24th annual Sperry Symposium will give special tribute to Dr. Sid B. Sperry on the 100th anniversary of his birth. Dr. Sperry taught at BYU for nearly 40 years (1932-1971). "He was truly one of the influential pioneers in LDS religious education," said Ellis T. Rasmussen, professor emeritus of ancient scripture. Dr Sperry believed sincerely that one must learn by study and by faith as much as possible about the history, practices, principles, and doctrines found in the scriptures and the history of the Church in order to teach the gospel effectively.

Hockey opens season in Rocky Mountains

Lemieux, Mario and Claude, will headline NHL's new season

Associated Press

Radio Lemieux returns to hockey, and hockey returns to Denver — with newly acquired MVP Claude Lemieux.

After taking a year off for health reasons, Claude Lemieux said, "If I can play 60-70 games in my career, that's the longest in my life. I'm not coming back to be an average player. I want to get my back in shape, I can be where I want to be in a couple of years ago."

The Colorado Avalanche, with Claude Lemieux, play host to the Detroit Red Wings tonight's only game, and the Devils start on road in defense of their Stanley Cup championship Saturday when they entertain the Florida Panthers in one of 11 NHL games.

"We've got to stay focused and hungry," said defenseman Scott Stevens. "That's the problem because we've got a lot of character people. I'd like to see us be very consistent. There's no reason we can't be in the playoffs."

The Devils, and the rest of the 26 NHL teams, will have the "luxury" this time of a long running start on the season. Last season, the lockout prevented that as the league went into a month-long labor strike.

With no neutral-site games this year, the league has returned to an 82-game season.

One of the league in the exhibition season has been the emphasis on obstruction penalties. Officials have been told to enforce these rules so that players will be allowed to skate freely and, the NHL hopes, inject more excitement into a game that was defined as boring by critics last season.

Utah Grizzlies: Minor league team skated to Salt Lake when Nordiques moved to Denver

By DAVID GARRETT
Universe Sports Writer

The Colorado Avalanche and Utah Grizzlies open their home regular season schedules tonight, representing an influx of quality hockey into the Rocky Mountain region. Both are coming off successful seasons and have high expectations for the upcoming season.

The Avalanche, formerly known as the Quebec Nordiques, had the second-best record in the NHL last year. It is a young team that plays an exciting brand of hockey, scoring lots of goals.

The Avalanche are loaded with stars: Joe Sakic, Owen Nolan, Peter Forsberg and Stanley Cup MVP Claude Lemieux are among the team's brightest. Their playoff inexperience caught up with them last year as they were eliminated in the first round by the defending champion New York Rangers.

An ESPN commercial promoting the Avalanche's first game against Detroit pokes fun at the inexperienced Colorado hockey fan. "That's not Jason (from 'Friday the 13th'), that's the goalie," a mother says to her troubled child rink-side.

The Avalanche hope to follow the successes of the San Jose Sharks, Anaheim Mighty Ducks, and Los Angeles Kings in bringing hockey to the west.

The Sharks and Ducks have been huge successes in their areas both in marketing and attendance. Unlike those teams, the Avalanche have a running start, bringing in a proven winner. The Sharks and Ducks had to start from scratch through expansion.

When the Avalanche moved in, the defending IHL champion Denver Grizzlies needed a new home and found it in Utah. They return most of their Turner Cup champion team including Mike Williams, Chris Morinucchi, Gord Dineen and Andy Berkley. One key element missing is MVP goalie Tommy Salo who moved on to the New York Islanders, the Grizzlies' NHL affiliate.

On Sept. 29 the team opened its season with a 6-5 overtime shootout victory over the Phoenix Roadrunners.

Tonight the Grizzlies will play the Peoria Rivermen, who finished first in their division last year with 113 points. Saturday they face the San Francisco Spiders.

The first 10,000 fans at the Peoria game will receive a commemorative ticket celebrating the team's inaugural game in Utah. Both games will be played at the Delta Center at 7 p.m. The Delta Center will be the Grizzlies' home until a rink in West Valley City is built. The team's average attendance in Denver was 12,000.

Proving grounds of California will test women's soccer team

By MISSY BAIRD
Universe Sports Writer

The BYU women's soccer team is in Southern California this weekend where it will take on three teams, none of which they have played before.

The first team the Cougars face is San Diego State, the only WAC team they have yet to play. San Diego State has an overall record of 5-5-1, compared to BYU's record of 6-3-1.

Coach Jennifer Rockwood said San Diego State has a well-established program and that they have more experience playing Division I teams than BYU does.

The game with the Aztecs will be a major factor in the Cougars' post-season plans.

"We need to win in order for us to stay at the top of the WAC standings and get a bye at the WAC tournament," Rockwood said.

The other two teams BYU plays on its California road trip — Pepperdine and the University of San Diego — belong to the West Coast Conference.

Sophomore forward Heather Dahl said both Pepperdine and San Diego have been playing top 20 schools this season, making it difficult to judge how good they will be based on their unimpressive records.

The Cougars will play Pepperdine Saturday evening. Pepperdine has an overall record of 1-5-2.

The final game of the Cougars' California trip will take place Monday afternoon against San Diego, whose overall record is 3-4-0.

Rockwood said these road games will be a test for the Cougars — especially since they are playing three games in four days.

"It will be a good weekend to prove ourselves," Dahl said.

"We expect to do well," said senior defender Camille Henry.

Henry stressed that the team needs to keep its composure and play possession soccer in order to win these games.

"We need to play together as a team, and not as individuals," Henry said.

Mahon thinks about quitting, but pins Browns

Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Quarterback Jim Mahon has returned to the Browns.

Mahon, 36, who re-signed with the Browns on Wednesday, said he considered not returning.

"I talked to my wife about it and I decided we already had the kids moved away," he said. "I've been in the league a long time already. So, we decided to stick it out. I guess the Browns are trying to trade someone to make Mahon had been dropped by the Browns in their final preseason cut and expected to return quickly.

The plan was maybe a couple of weeks maybe a week. Here it is, five weeks later," he said.

Mahon is in his 14th year in the league, having also played for the Browns, Philadelphia, San Diego and the Redskins.

Liwan's policy on AIDS keeps magic in limbo

Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Magic Johnson's agent says there must be "good signals" in Taiwan, where a government health official said the basketball star has been barred from entering the country because he has AIDS virus.

Johnson has an official invitation from the president of Taiwan to visit there, agent Lon Rosen said today. "So obviously there are mixed signals."

Johnson is scheduled to arrive in Taiwan later this month with his All-Star basketball team for two exhibitions.

Liung Po-ya, director general of the Department of Health, said he decided to bar Johnson because Taiwanese want to prevent people who have major contagious diseases, including AIDS, from visiting Taiwan.

Cheng-chung, owner of the Taiwan's Hung Fu Rams basketball team, had said his team would play games against Johnson's squad of NBA stars, who were scheduled to arrive Oct. 30.

Johnson had said the purpose of his visit also includes educating people about AIDS.

Johnson retired in 1992 after announcing that he had contracted the AIDS virus and has since become a spokesman on the disease.

"This is a learning experience," Johnson said of the reaction in some parts to people with the AIDS virus. "I had the same type of thing happen in Indonesia, and the government apologized. He's played in Korea. We haven't been able to reschedule the game as yet, but we will. I have no doubt this situation in Taiwan will be resolved quickly."

Multiple intelligence theory reconsiders 'dumb student' label

By THIRA SCHMIDT
Special to the Universe

his parents took Kim Peek to a psychologist, he was diagnosed as mentally retarded. At six years of age he had memorized eleven books and flunked a regular IQ test with a score of only 72.

Peek, the subject of the movie "Rainman," is an example of what is known as "multiple intelligence," an educational theory that recognizes profound differences in perceptual abilities.

"I don't have to be handicapped or different," said Peek, who was a featured guest at a multiple intelligence conference in Provo in September.

Peek exercises his unique abilities in extraordinary ways. He knows all the zip codes in the United States, reads a book like "Hunt for October" in 23 minutes and has a 7 percent comprehension of what he reads.

Multiple intelligence (MI) theory is incorporated by teachers in their curriculums, and has shown promising results in a variety of studies with students from many different backgrounds.

The educational theory was introduced in 1983 by Howard Gardner, a professor of education at Harvard, who proposed that there are actually seven kinds of intelligence: linguistic, logical-mathematical, spatial, musical, bodily-kinesthetic, interpersonal and intrapersonal.

Aleene B. Nielsen, an assistant professor in the Department of Special Education and Rehabilitation at the University of Arizona, pioneered a research project that works closely with teachers in 10 school districts in Arizona to help apply the MI theory, especially in schools with a high percentage of minorities.

"Each of us has all seven of these intelligences in varying degrees, but most of us are not gifted in all seven," Nielsen said.

She says the development of high-level competence requires innate capacity, motivation and opportunity.

"Environment, cultural context and language may influence all of these important factors, and these factors influence the specific ways in which giftedness is expressed," Nielsen said. "Therefore, it is important to give students the chance to demonstrate their ability in a way that is best for them, since they all come from different backgrounds."

Nielsen said improvement in the writing skills of many students on a Navajo reservation when art and writing were combined, applying spatial interest and ability to linguistic learning, is a good example of this theory.

"A survey conducted by the U.S. Office of Civil Rights revealed a significant underrepresentation of Hispanic students in programs for the gifted, and similar discrepancies exist for American Indians, Asian/Pacific Islanders and African Americans," Nielsen said.

Nielsen said she developed this program because she believes the cultural and linguistic diversity of the United States should be honored, valued and represented in special ways.

Robert Colomb, a fourth-grade teacher at Sunset View Elementary School in Provo, has held a special MI day with some other teachers at his school since January.

"Every Thursday is the so-called Galaxy Day," Colomb said. "The students rotate through several classrooms and learn about various topics using all seven intelligences, which helps us to find out about their personalities and gives students a chance to learn in a way they like to learn."

Colomb teaches mentally and physically handicapped children and 50 percent of his students speak English as a second language.

"I see very much success if I try to find out about the strongest intelligences of the individual students and give them the opportunity to work with their strengths," Colomb said.

He said the students' interest in developing the other intelligences usually increases naturally as they do something they like to do, since all the intelligences are closely connected with each other.

Marco A. Ruiz, a teacher in a bilingual school in Tucson, Arizona, teaches Hispanic students.

"Students feel respected when they have options for accomplishing learning tasks, and everybody can be successful in some area," Ruiz said. "In this kind of learning environment, students do not feel threatened; they are invited to take risks without fearing failure."

Ruiz gives them many opportunities to try various ways of doing things to help them increase all their intelligences.

Keith J. Rogers, a BYU professor in the Department of Secondary Education, promotes MI in conferences, workshops and classes all over the country.

"Many people became more open to the ideas of MI when the movie 'Rainman' came out," Rogers said. "Yet, everybody has a unique brain and intelligences that are more developed and intelligences that are less developed."

Rogers said schools have traditionally emphasized and rewarded only two kinds of intelligences: linguistic and logical/mathematical.

"Kids weak in these areas have often been branded as 'dumb' and their strengths in other areas have been overlooked," Rogers said.

He said researchers now believe even "Rainman" uses 11 to 12 percent of his brain while the average person uses three to seven percent.

Pope condemns ultra-nationalism, urges children to pray for humanity

Associated Press

RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Pope John Paul II told the United Nations to overcome extreme nationalism and wipe away the "tears of the century," then delivered his message of hope Thursday to tens of thousands of pilgrims at a football stadium.

Hours of steady rain, more than 80,000 people gathered at Giants Stadium, many in rain slickers and all cheering as the pontiff slowly circled the field in a helicopter.

"This is the most important day of my life. I cannot tell you how important it is to be here," said 76-year-old Edward Pietro of Toros River, Calif., today, if nothing else exciting or joyful happens in my life, I will die a happy man."

After the pope urged the United Nations to be an authentic force for peace, the United Nations Organization to rise more and more above the status of an administrative institution and to become a moral center for all the nations of the world feel that he told the 185-member General Assembly.

The pope's visit during the United Nations' 50th anniversary year was the first point of his fourth pilgrimage to the United States. The organization is in debt, in part because of its peacekeeping operations in Bosnia and elsewhere, and John Paul said he hoped to see it strengthened.

Meeting at the United Nations, the pope's visit was the first since the pope's arrival Wednesday, was for a small group of dignitaries and invited guests. It was in Giants Stadium that masses of pilgrims could see the man many believe is the vicar of Christ on Earth.

Among them was Donna Tellicchio, who suffers from multiple sclerosis and uses a wheelchair. She came hoping the pope would touch and miraculously cure her.

"I believe in miracles," she said. "I came because 'God wanted me to be here.' I was here in the rain for quite a few Grateful Dead concerts, but I was here for that, I should be here for this," he said.

Members of the 500-voice choir stood outside in the drizzle, insisting they were in good spirits.

"We have been practicing by singing 'Singing in the Rain' and 'Raindrops Keep Falling on my Head,'" said Marie King of the Sisters of Charity in Lyndhurst, N.J.

The austere U.N. headquarters alongside New York's Central Park, the papal visit evoked a warmth rare in such formal surroundings.

As the 75-year-old pontiff approached the main entrance, U.N. employees stood on furniture and hopped up and down with cameras raised over their heads. Their chants of "John Paul II, we love you" echoed through the stone and glass hall.

Children from the United Nations International School, many dressed in clothing that reflected their ethnic backgrounds, greeted the pope in the lobby. One child held a papier-mache white dove.

The pope lifted the symbol of peace and asked the children to "pray for ... humanity."

John Paul sketched the dramatic changes since he last addressed the assembly in 1979 — the fall of Communism and cuts in nuclear arsenals.

Now the danger stems from a narrow and exclusive nationalism, which has triggered a nightmare of violence and terror, most recently during ethnic slaughter in Rwanda and Bosnia, he said.

"Nationalism, particularly in its most radical forms, is thus the antithesis of true patriotism, and today we must ensure that extreme nationalism does not continue to give rise to new forms of the aberrations of totalitarianism," John Paul said.

In an unusual move, the pontiff cut large parts from his printed text as he delivered the speech.

The cuts were made to save time, Vatican spokesman Joaquin Navarro said, noting that each delegate was given the entire text.

John Paul made his speech in English, French, Russian and Spanish and delivered greetings in Arabic and Chinese, receiving a 45-second standing ovation at the conclusion.

Touching on a theme he raised during a trip to Africa last month, the pope said developing countries often become economically dependent on other countries. This offends the conscience of humanity and poses a formidable moral challenge to the human family, he said.

"We have within us the capacities for wisdom and virtue," he continued.

"We shall see that the tears of this century have prepared the ground for a new springtime of the human spirit."

At other stops during his four-hour stay at U.N. headquarters, the pontiff dedicated a plaque to U.N. personnel killed while on peacekeeping duty or on humanitarian missions.

John Paul's trip will last through Sunday night, and is to include huge Masses in Central Park in Manhattan and Aqueduct Race Track and at Camden Yards baseball stadium in Baltimore.

Dr. Paul Alan Cox

BYU Dean of General and Honors Education and Professor of Botany

Dr. Cox is an ethnobiologist who specializes in the use of plants by Polynesian peoples, in the breeding systems of tropical plants, and on plant/pollinator interactions.

Professor Cox has gained international recognition for his struggle to preserve the rainforests and indigenous cultures of the South Pacific. In 1988 he led efforts to establish the USA's first national park in American Samoa. This area preserves more than 11,000 acres of lowland rainforest and associated reef. In 1989 he raised funds to save the 30,000-acre Falealupo Rainforest in Western Samoa from logging, thereby creating one of the world's first indigenously controlled rainforest reserves. He and colleagues have also led the fight against poaching Pacific flying foxes, which has resulted in an international ban on traffic in this species.

Named a National Science Foundation Presidential Young Investigator by President Reagan in 1985, Cox has won many scholarly recognitions. He earned his PhD from Harvard in 1981, where he was both a Danforth and an NSF Fellow. He has twice won Harvard's Bowdoin Prize in English Literature. He has been a Fulbright Fellow and has held visiting appointments at Melbourne (Australia) University and at Uppsala and Umeo Universities in Sweden. He was a Miller Fellow at the Miller Institute for Basic Research in Science at UC, Berkeley, before joining BYU's faculty.

Proposal may curtail funds for disabled, local educators say

By MINDY MCCOOL
Universe Staff Writer

Local educators are worried about funding programs proposed in the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act that the U.S. Department of Education recently submitted to Congress.

This proposal would supplement the original act, parts of which expired in September. The act serves 5.4 million children with disabilities, according to a press release from the Department of Education. The proposal would promote educational excellence for these children.

Provo educators' main concern about the proposal is that it may mean cuts in the funding Provo receives, said Doug Gardner, district compliance officer of the Provo School District.

There may be unfunded mandates, which dictate school regulations without providing necessary funds, Gardner said.

Provo educators try to include disabled students in regular classes as much as possible, he said.

They also try to give students extra help outside of class, he added. This includes helping students who struggle with regular classes but are not disabled enough to qualify for state or federal help.

The proposal suggests revising the way money is distributed to the states to support programs for children with disabilities. Funds would be distributed on the basis of population rather than the number of children with disabilities served in the states' programs.

The method of distributing resources based on categorical grants would be replaced. The current method classifies disabilities into 14 categories and gives more serious disabilities a larger allotment of funds, Gardner said.

The proposal contains a system of five comprehensive, coordinated categories, including all disabilities that are currently eligible for aid, according to the press release.

Students helped by the act are not children with learning disabilities, Gardner said.

They are children with physical disabilities whose brains work and learn like other children's. These students need to be in regular classes, he said.

Disabled children should be included in regular classes as much as possible, agreed Fred LeMay, a principal in Finneytown School District in Cincinnati, Ohio.

Both disabled children and those who aren't disabled benefit from including disabled students in regular classes, he said.

Hopefully, the proposal will make it easier to meet the individual needs of the children instead of the needs of categories, LeMay said.

The proposal will not help serve disabled children, said Ted Kelly, director of special education for Provo schools. The goals have already been accomplished here, he said.

Provo has had the support of parents and the community, allowing Provo to effectively serve disabled children, Kelly said.

The greatest success a school can hope to have in serving disabled students is to achieve a close interaction between students, parents, and teachers, he said.

The proposal is just "spiffing up the old one to make it more palatable," said Kathy Edwards of Recreation and Habilitation Services in Provo.

Edwards said she supports the proposal if it helps disabled children receive an education that prepares them for life after graduation and helps parents get more involved.

The proposal, which was constructed with the help of comments from parents and educators, is based on six principles, according to the press release.

The first principle promotes cooperation with state and local efforts to improve education.

The second principle increases expectations and access to the general curriculum by instating measurable annual objectives and measuring students' achievement in the general curriculum.

Focusing on individual needs and environment are included in the third principle.

The Department of Education suggested this might be done by involving parents in placement decisions, sending regular reports to parents on their children's progress and providing mediation to resolve disputes between parents and schools.

This principle also includes improving school safety by allowing schools to remove students who bring dangerous weapons to school or who threaten the safety of themselves or others.

The fourth principle is to train families and teachers to effectively support students' learning.

This involves expanding a national network of parent training centers and expanding a professional development program for teachers. The development program would improve teachers' effectiveness in teaching students with disabilities.

Make teaching and learning the focus, the fifth principle states. Requiring greater participation of disabled students in school assessments would increase schools' accountability for the students' educational results.

Also, decreasing the amount of required paperwork would increase the amount of time that can be spent with students.

Using early intervention to prepare children to start school is the sixth principle.

States could work within their own systems to serve preschool children who are at risk of developmental delay.

Award commends ethical conduct of businesses

By ELIZABETH SHIELDS
Universe Staff Writer

The Better Business Bureau has introduced a national business award for ethical business practices called The Torch Award for Marketplace Ethics.

The award fills a need in the marketplace to recognize "not only profitable organizations, but also (those which) place their values high," said Bill Beadle, president of the BBB of Utah.

The BBB is re-emphasizing its "core mission of advocating ethical conduct," Beadle said.

Because BYU is a "value-based organization" with high-profile business and law schools, Beadle said it should be interested in the nature of this award.

Anyone recognizing high standards of behavior on the corporate level is urged to nominate a candidate by calling the BBB of Utah at (800) 456-3907 to obtain an application.

Beadle listed three companies that are known for their ethical practices: RC Willey, Kellogg's and Johnson & Johnson.

"It's our philosophy to be fair and honest with the company, even if it means losing money," said RC Willey Orem store manager Tim Hess.

The Salt Lake City-based company sold warranties to consumers through a company that later went out of business. RC Willey agreed to repair the products under warranty themselves. This decision, made by CEO Bill Child, has cost RC Willey about $2 million they were not required to spend, Hess said.

Earlier, Holbrooke had negotiated an agreement on a 51 percent-49 percent division of Bosnia in favor of the government and its Croat allies. The exact division of power remains to be worked out, and the complex power arrangement risks a return to ethnic-based paralysis that led to the April 1992.

Detroit newspaper unions make back-to-work offer

Associated Press

DETROIT — The six unions that have been on strike against the Detroit News and the Detroit Free Press for three months offered to return to work under certain conditions Thursday. The newspapers responded coolly.

"It's time to settle this dispute," said Al Derey, chairman of the union umbrella organization. "It has placed a terrible strain on our members and families. It has divided our community. Today we say, 'It's time for a truce.'"

About 2,500 workers — from truck drivers to reporters — walked off their jobs July 13, largely over work rules and wages.

Talks have been held sporadically with no progress reported.

The unions said they would send their members to work under terms of expired contracts if the newspapers agreed to, among other things, a month of intensive bargaining and, if needed after that, binding arbitration.

But Detroit Newspapers, the agency that produces and distributes the newspapers, said Thursday evening that it would not take issues to binding arbitration.

"The unions will not dictate the future of this company, and we don't want outsiders doing it either. That's the responsibility of company management," the company said in a statement.

Susie Ellwood, a spokeswoman for Detroit Newspapers, said management will not fire the 1,300 replacement workers hired during the strike. She also said that employees fired for strike-related violence and arrests should not expect their jobs back.

The Free Press, owned by Knight-Ridder Inc., and the News, owned by Gannett Co., have common business and production operations under a joint operating agreement but maintain separate newsroom staffs.
